Democracy in Education is not a Spectator Sport.
Here's IDEA's Playbook:

GENERATING KNOWLEDGE

IDEA launched the Learning Breakthrough Series with its first session in Jackson, Mississippi, November 7-11th. Eight teams from across the U.S. and Puerto Rico began an 18 month long learning journey (also called deep-dive research for you works out there) exploring the question:

What connections and approaches to practice, policy, public narrative, and strategy support the meaningful and sustained engagement of all young people and communities in education, while honoring the wisdom and differences of varying local contexts?

You can follow this series on Twitter at #ideaLBS, and a report on the first session of work will soon be available online.

The LBS is generating policy, practice, narrative, and the kind of strategy knowledge that is adaptive, place-based, and powerful.

“This is hands-down the best conference or gathering on education and organizing I’ve ever attended. I can’t wait to get home and share it with my team.” - Dana from BYOP

“I used to think that we needed to focus on playing defense. Now, I’m thinking the best defense is a powerful offense. We need to generate the narrative, policies, and practices we need and want.” - Caitlin from Youth on Board
